Reminiscences of Honolulu.-No 11.

Mataio Keknanaoa, who was the husband of the High Chiefess Kinau, and the father of two Hawaiian Kings-Kamehameha IV. and V .- was Governor of Oahu from 1839 until 1864; his death occurred in 1869. He was also under the ancient regime, as Governor, ex-officio "principal Judge of the Superior Court for Oahu," until the reorganization of that Court in 1848 and the appointment of William L. Lee as Judge. Kekuanaoa held his Court in the "Kauwila House," near the old Fort. His mode of conducting business was original and sometimes amusing to an outsider. He was generally assisted in cases where foreigners were interested by either Judge Andrews or Mr. C. G. Hopkins, and Mr. Ricord, the Attorney-General made himself a prominent feature of the Court very often. technical objections of counsel and legal quibbles received very slight attention from the Governor, who treated them as mere surplusage or facetim, and went right on with the case. He was decidedly "free and easy" in his manner on the beach, chatting with the lawyers and jury while he smoked a cigar, and smiled benignantly around; but sometimes, as though suddenly reminded of the majesty of the law he was there to administer, he would assume a very wise and grave expression, but only for a time, when he would relax again as a comical idea struck him. At II o'clock in the forenoon, it was his custom to stop proceedings abraptly, no matter what was on the tapis, and call to his attendants to bring in coffee. Of this the Court and jury leisurely partook, after which cigars were passed around, and then business was resamed. His Honor's charges to the jury were perfect models of brevity and terse-The following is a fair sample: "Gentlemen-You have heard all the talk from this lawyer, and all the talk from that lawyer, and you know all about this case.

and then come and tell me." The Legislature also held its sessions at Hale Kauwila, or sometimes in a wooden house a few yards seaward of the former, known as "Mauna Kilika,"-mountain of silk. As I have previously stated, it was so named from the numerous silk gowns which appeared there on the first session of the Legislature after it was erected. Chiefs were such by the rank of their mothers, and chief women sat in the Legislature and in the Government Councils. Under the Constitution of 1840, there was a sort of representation of the people in the annual parliaments, but there were no regular elections held. The King sent to each district an intimation that it would be well for the people to send such and such men to Honolulu to consult with the chiefs, whereupon criers went through the district giving notice of the meeting, at which the persons so suggested were chosen viva voce. They were always men of some property, generally retainers of the chiefs, and they served without pay. As may be supposed, in a Legislature so composed there was no such thing known as an Opposition; there was very little discussion and everything was done as it had been determined beforehand by the King and his advisers. Government was carried on very quietly and economically. In 1850 an Act was passed "To regulate the election of Representatives of the people." The number was fixed at twenty-two, with $3 per diem and mileage, and the elective franchise was free to all male subjects. The first Legislative Assembly under the new law was in 1851, William L. Lee being speaker of the House of Representatives, which met at "Mauna

To revert again to the "Forties." The foreign community was a very small one, and everybody knew everybody else, and was on more or less terms of familiarity. It was mostly "Tom, Dick and Harry," with the multitude, and one must have be either a clergyman or a big merchant to be entitled Mister. Communication with the outside world was had at long intervals, and in the months when the whalers were absent on their cruises, our people were quite dependent upon their own resources. These of course were limited. But we had some original characters in those days, whose peculiarities and idiosyncracies gave a zest and flavor to island life that is wanting to-day. There was F. W. Thompson, the Auctioneer-"Fred," as he was genially known to everybody-a prince of good fellows; could sing a song and tell a story as happily as any man I ever knew. For a time, he held the position of Sheriff of the Island of Onhu, but soon gave it up for the more congenial occupation of an auctioneer, in which, from his "quips and quirks" and never failing wit and good humor, he was remarkably successful. It was during Fred's incumbency of the Sheriffalty that an amusing episode took place, which was duly chronicled in the "Tongataboo Letters" of the Ness, much to the entertainment of the citizens, and of none more than Fred himself. A native boy, known as Jack Canoe, had been somehow irregularly shipped on board the American whaleship Black Hawk, and Mr. Ricord, as Attorney-General, issued an order to the Sheriff to proceed on board said ship and bring the boy on shore. The News thus satirized the Sheriff under the name of "Roderick Ton-

"Nearly all our town assembled to witness the embarkation, then about to take place, amid the dread rolling of one base and sundry kettle drams, of a strong detachment of the Tongataboo Indescribables. Among the rest were gathered many of our 'unnaturalized subjects,' who, coming from 'down east,' felt a lively interest in these mailed (malord?) warriors, on account of sandry military coats sparsely distributed among them, recognized as old acquaintances formerly in the peaceful
